SARA STORY

HOMAGE TO THE SQUARE

The work of Josef Albers shaped New York designer Sara Story's treatment of Greystone's grand living room, which features a 1969 screen print by the German-born artist, along with works by Louise Fishman, Ron Gorchov and Juan Usié. "I'd seen an Albers show at The Morgan Library & Museum three years ago, and it made me want to play with color theory, forms and geometry," she says. "The juxtaposition of color and shape in this space is motivated by Albers and his use of color palettes and their interplay with forms." Within the small vestibule at the entrance to the space, Story introduced a contemporary architectural element by building a rectangular lacquer box. "It compresses the feeling as you first enter the room," she says. "Then you step out and have 20-foot-high ceilings." At the end of the box is the Albers work. Throughout, there are singular pieces, such as a coffee table by Aurelien Gallet and a marble-and-bronze console by Achille Salvagni, along with creations by two other favorite artists, including a Peter Lane sideboard faced in blue ceramic-relief panels and David Wiseman's intricate Lattice Ribbon dining table in cast and poured bronze. A contemporary art collector who studies how museum and gallery shows are curated, Story believes the use of negative space can transform a room. "Here, there are three seating areas, so you can all be together, but there's also space in between," she says. "You can have a collection of three pieces together, but there's always enough space for you to let something have a moment. I love color, I love pattern, I love energy, but I also think it's nice to have serenity and peacefulness and not have a room look like a furniture showroom. An interior should always unfold for you. It's like a journey. You can always add. You can always collect."
